Theatre & Dance season interrogates urgent crises

By Becca Vaclavik

In a typical year, the Department of Theatre & Dance plans its season well in advance, choosing events long before audiences experience them live. Of course, 2020 is anything but a typical year. So when COVID-19 shut down campus in March, leadership was forced to scrap a nearly complete season and envision something new for 2020-21.

“COVID-19 left us in a space of doing some deep thinking around how we can use this platform as a vehicle to continue to hold together and nurture a sense of community,” said Associate Chair of Dance Helanius J. Wilkins.

In the months since, the department has put together an abbreviated virtual season, featuring The Laramie Project, She Kills Monsters: Virtual Realms, and [un] WRAP. The new fall lineup interrogates many of the long-simmering crises 2020 has brought to a boil.

In October 1998, two men brutally murdered 21 year-old Matthew Shepard because he was gay. The Laramie Project is an investigative play created through 200 real-life interviews with the residents of Laramie, Wyoming, in the years that followed. This year marks the 20th anniversary of the first production and 22 years since Matthew’s death.

“In recent years, hate crimes have been on the rise,” said Elise Collins, who directs the production. “The Laramie Project serves as a litmus test to assess how far we’ve come as a nation and how far we still need to go.”

She Kills Monsters: Virtual Realms is an action-packed, hilarious homage to geek culture that tells the story of Agnes, a girl playing Dungeons & Dragons to better understand the world of her recently deceased sister Tilly. Its themes resonate personally with director Amanda Rose Villarreal.

“I have played D&D since I was in seventh grade, and it was the one place where I could explore my own identity. The queer space of D&D allows for a utopic reinvisioning of one’s self that growing up in conservative areas, as I did, doesn’t allow for … This play issues a challenge for the ‘average’ person, whether that’s white, cis-, or hetero-.”

Finally, this year’s [un]WRAP event, titled (un) doing and (re)making, features forums with and performances by renowned guest artists who are exploring inequities in dance.

“Artists have started to create a blueprint for the undoing of the field by looking deeply at how it exists right now. And then the remaking of it,” said Wilkins, who curated the symposium. “We’re expanding our conversations. Going forward, what do we want our world to be?”

Director’s note

How do people respond to acts of hatred? As a community, country, or audience? The Laramie Project confronts us with one community’s response to the brutal beating and death of Matthew Shepard in October 1998. This play rightly demands that we remember Matthew Shepard’s legacy.

The Laramie Project hits close to home. Literally close to home—the horrific beating of Matthew Shepard occurred two hours north of Boulder in Laramie, Wyoming and he died one hour away in Fort Collins. Multiple CU theatre faculty personally know artists from the original production and community members who were interviewed. This hate crime hits too close to home as violence against LGBTQ+ individuals is increasing.

This play is a litmus test on where we stand on violence and intolerance. How far have we come or not come in support of LGBTQ+ rights in this country since 1998?

To encourage critical examination of this play and its relevance in 2020, this production draws heavily upon Brechtian theatre techniques. Bertolt Brecht wanted audiences to acknowledge that a production was merely a production instead of reality. While this play is based on the words and lives of real people, the author’s note reminds us that our task is to “suggest, not to recreate.” Our backstage and technical elements are visible—keeping us transparent and candid. Performers change characters and costumes onstage, break the fourth wall and construct and deconstruct the set in view of the audience. Socially distanced staging and the use of masks emphasize the “space between people and towns” and undeniably ground this historical play in 2020.

Like the parable of “The Blind Men and the Elephant,” The Laramie Project uses multiple perspectives to give a more nuanced picture of what happened in 1998 and 1999. Our production asks you to view this story and each element from different perspectives. Actors play multiple characters, set elements are used in a variety of ways and filming enables us to show moments from multiple angles.

With all art, the creation of meaning is a collaboration between the artists and the audience. Twenty years ago, the Tectonic Theatre Project collaborated with the citizens of Laramie to create this play. Today, we ask you to create meaning with us, to remember Matthew Shepard and to bring into being the world you want to see another 20 years from now.

Dramaturg’s note
This year marks the 22nd anniversary of Matthew Shepard’s death and the 20th anniversary of The Laramie Project world premiere. The original production members couldn’t have imagined that, 20 years later, The Laramie Project would grow to be incredibly impactful in communities across the United States and around the world. This play and Matthew’s story have propelled discussions and legislation addressing the injustices faced by the LGBTQ+ community and other oppressed groups.

However, the unfortunate reality is that hate crimes continue to happen in this country and around the world at a growing rate. Wyoming remains one of the only four states that has not passed any sort of hate crime legislation. Leigh Fondakowski, the play’s head writer, is moved by the prevalence of the play, but simultaneously disappointed that society remains relatively unchanged:
“The play remains vital, when in fact it should feel historical or outdated by now. The fact that it’s not, and that this could still happen anywhere at any time—and does, just without the same media attention—is a call for us to not grow complacent.” (2020)

It is our intention to not only honor Matthew Shepard this fall, but to create a space in which our audiences can engage and be inspired to take action. For those who are interested, I encourage you to look into the Matthew Shepard Foundation and the Trevor Project.
